Regent O'Brien Declines Chancellor Nomination

BY RENÉE NOVY

Dr. Nancy O'Brien, currently a member of the University of Nebraska Board of Regents declined a nomination for chancellor of UNO.

"I think the chancellorship of UNO is one of the plum jobs in higher education, and I feel honored to have my name submitted for consideration for the position," O'Brien said.

"At this point, however, I am committed to continuing my work in the governance of higher education, and that precludes my serving in an administrative role."

O'Brien was elected to a second six-year term on the Board of Regents in November 1996.

Hemlock Society, Unicameral Debate Controversial Right to Die

BY ANA MERIZALDE

Hemlock Nebraska and the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) Nebraska hosted one of three presentations on the controversial issue of physician aid-in-dying at the Milo Bail Student Center on April 21.

"The Nebraska Physician Aid-In-Dying Bill was crafted from review of a number of different models that are being tested in states across the nation," a pamphlet passed out at the presentation quoted Neb. legislation.

Sen. Ernie Chambers introduced the bill in the 1996 short session. It died after a hearing before the Legislature's Judiciary Committee which took no action on the bill.

Chambers reintroduced the bill as Legislative Bill 406 in the 1997 session of the Unicameral. With strong opposition from the religious right, it met the same fate as before.

"First, to give an answer on the question 'What's on the agenda tonight? Is there a right to die?' asked Herbert Barnard, the health environment and welfare counselor of the Royal Netherlands Embassy.

"There is no right to die in the Netherlands. The answer is no," Barnard said.

The Supreme Court's impending decision this year about whether there should be a constitutional right to euthanasia and assisted suicide in the United States has resulted in enormous attention for the euthanasia policy of the Netherlands, Barnard said.

"Opponents of assisted suicide regard what has happened in the Netherlands as a nightmare scenario that should be avoided for the United States," Barnard said.

"Proponents of the right of assisted suicide on the other hand look at the Netherlands as the enlightened example and say that the Dutch policy proves that a regulated system of assisted suicide and euthanasia is feasible," Barnard said.

Barnard addressed U.S. newspapers' misunderstandings of what happens in the Netherlands.

"In the Netherlands, euthanasia is defined as the deliverance of the termination of the life of a person on his or her serious and explicit request," Barnard said.

"Essential in this definition is the request. The termination of the life of the patient without his or her consent would be considered murder," Barnard said.

Euthanasia can be considered using medical ethics' guidelines as well as case law provided by the courts in different

Hansen Serves Up Inspirational Breakfast Soup

BY BRIAN J. TODD

Delivering a speech that gave as much motivation as it did inspiration, Mark Victor Hansen woke the crowd at Wednesday mornings Academy, Business and Community Breakfast at the Holiday Inn on 72nd and Grover Streets.

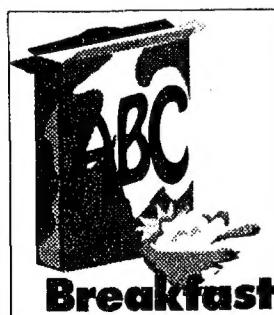

Hansen, co-editor of the best-selling "Chicken Soup for the Soul" book series, had the crowd repeating motivational slogans and hugging one another.

"Inspired means you're waking up your soul and motivated means that you're turning on the engine to the car," Hansen said, explaining the difference between the directions he takes in helping people. "Hopefully today I was both."

Hansen gave the crowd four principles - think big, put it in writing, visualize it and realize it, and get your team together - which, he said, would help them succeed in all the goals they could set for themselves.

One goal he had, he said, was to have a book on the best-seller list for 10 years. His "Chicken Soup" books, which he co-edits with Jack Canfield, has graced that list since the books first came out. Currently there are 12 volumes of his books with soup flavors including "Chicken Soup for Women's Souls," "Chicken Soup for the Workplace" and three helpings of plain "Chicken Soup for the Soul."

Hansen said future book in the series could include

State Budget's Extra Money Belongs to Nobody

BY STEPHEN CROUCHER

This month the six members of the Economic Forecasting Advisory Board for the State of Nebraska found a budget surplus in the state's revenue projections. This means that the state has more money than previously thought for this year and for next year.

So how is the state going to spend this money?

Dara Troutman, communication specialist for the University of Nebraska (NU) stated that the surplus, "is unobligated money," which means the money belongs to nobody at this time.

There are many groups and individuals in the state lobbying to get a piece of this surplus. The Legislature and the governor are presently measuring the merits of all the proposals. Governor Nelson wants to use this budget surplus for an income tax cut next year. Prison construction and renovation are also options on the table.

NU President L. Dennis Smith issued a statement on April 18 stating the NU's plan. "From my perspective, one-time expenditures for construction of the IST&E Institute and for deferred maintenance make good sense — they meet critical needs and do not add to the base budget," he said.

NU believes that the money should go to university maintenance to help renovate and repair university buildings and campuses.

"If the state does not allocate sufficient resources to address deferred maintenance in times such as these when the economy and revenues are strong, the problem will only get worse. The condition of buildings does not improve and the cost does not go down the longer maintenance is delayed," Smith said.

"We presently have a backlog of around $100 million. To preserve the large taxpayer investment in state universities, this backlog needs to be eliminated," Troutman said.

The Legislature and the governor have many different ways to allocate these funds. Instead of giving all the funds to one proposal, the money could be spread out among the many different proposals.

The Enlightening New Science of Birth Order

BY BARBARA DOMINGUEZ

The Daily Sundial California State University-Northridge

NORTHridge, Calif.—Okay, now you can stop blaming your parents for who you are. More revealing information about your character may come from the way you and your siblings fit in together (and fight together).

"Birth order is only one of a multitude of things that affect personality. It just happens to be one of the best predictors of behavior," Frank Sulloway, a research scholar and author of "Born to Rebel: Birth Order, Family Dynamics and Creative Lives," says in a recent magazine article.

Is birth order really crucial to the adult you have become? Here is a quick mini-profile of each of the four different birth orders. Pick your place, and find out what you really are all about.

If You're A Firstborn . . .

According to Sulloway, firstborns are high achievers. You tend to stay in mom's and dad's good graces, while simultaneously using your grand stature to boss younger siblings around.

Ultimately, your respect for authority and sense of responsibility are caused by role playing. Remember walking around Disneyland at the age of 15 with all your buddies, but the only way you were allowed to go was to bring your 12-year-old brother? Believe it or not, each time you grabbed his hooded sweatshirt to keep an eye on him or constantly pestered him to eat something (instead of riding Matterhorn twice), you were slipping into the role of a surrogate parent.

"I am the first of two, and I am a complete perfectionist," Wendy Cintra, a CSU freshman, says. "I am a skeptical person about this birth order stuff, but all these adjectives describe me so well."

When it comes to having friends, you're capable, loyal and a true friend to the end. Your friends may also refer to you as responsible and organized.

"My friend is a firstborn child, and he is so anal like you wouldn't believe," Paul Vernon, a CSU child development major, says.

Firstborns seem to be logical, scholarly and highly motivated. So what's their flaw? Ex-boyfriends or girlfriends will probably say that firstborns are totally possessive, and in addition, things have to go your way or it's the highway.

If You're A Middle Child . . .

It's not always easy being stuck in the middle. You may have realized at an early age you can't possibly out-muscle your older sibling or simply act cute and cuddly like the baby of the family. But you are definitely good at something: mediating war zones.

You are the pleasant peacemaker in your family. You are willing to compromise and are the one to diffuse tension. Sulloway also describes the middle child as being free-spirited, friendly and sociable.

"One of my coolest friends is a middle child, too," Catherine Bideau, a CSU biology major, says. "She is really adventurous and she introduces me to different places and things to do."

One of the problems with being a middle child is in their decision making. According to Sulloway, middleborn people are inconsistent when making up their mind. Could it be that you'd rather tell a lie than face an argument? This wishy-washy attitude can lead to the conflict you are always trying to avoid.

cases. The Royal Dutch Medical Association determined the following guidelines:

- There has to be a voluntary, competent, and durable request from the patient;
- The request of the patient has to be well considered and based on full information;
- The patient is in the situation of intolerable and hopeless suffering, either physical or mental suffering with no prospect of improvement;
- If there are no acceptable alternatives left, euthanasia has to be the last choice after all other possibilities have been considered;
- The doctor has consulted with another independent doctor who has experience in the field before deciding about or performing euthanasia;
- Euthanasia was performed in accordance with good medical practice;

Although the Catholic and Protestant churches are against assisted suicide and euthanasia, Barnard gave statistics on the causes of death in the Netherlands.

There is an annual average of 135,000 deaths in the Netherlands. Ninety-six percent are due to natural causes and 3.4 percent or 3,400 are the result of medical action, Barnard said.

Health Fair Brings Education, Awareness to Midlands Hospital

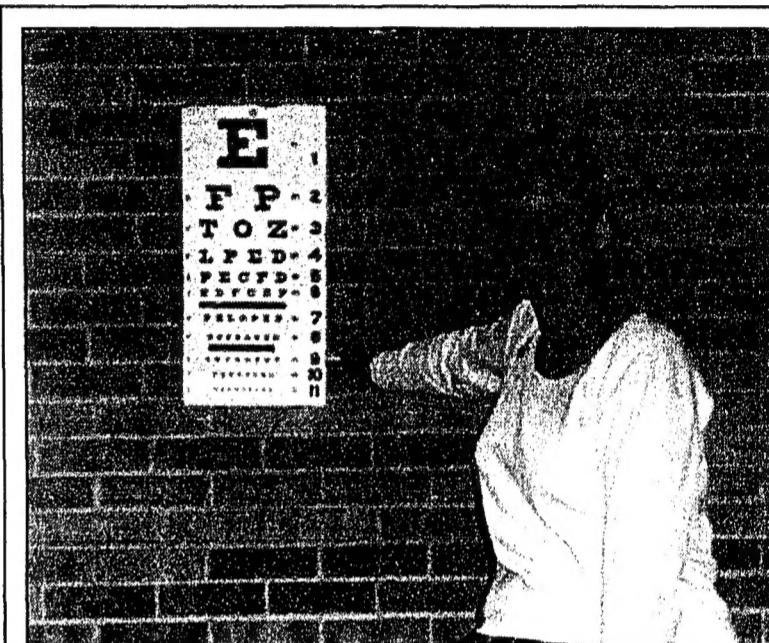

BY RENEE RYAN

Good health usually involves education, information about individual needs, and diagnosis of potential problems.

On Sunday, April 20, Midlands Community Hospital offered a health fair to promote good health. The event was part of the Health Fair of the Midlands for 17 years, UNO, was working at the fat-testing booth and has helped with three fairs including this one. The most important part of the event is public awareness for free, Cahill said.

The event is sponsored by the hospital but two years ago the Health Fair of the Midlands ended, Midlands Hospital decided to continue the fair themselves.

The fair included blood pressure checks, blood work, pharmacy and dietary reviews, vision testing, glaucoma screening, digital rectal exams, hearing tests, pulmonary function, body fat, and oral and foot screenings.

Information was available regarding cancer, diabetes, sleep disorders, cardiac rehabilitation, prenatal and post partum health, mental health, and home health.

Seasonal allergy testing was given to find participants for a field study to be conducted by Linda Ford's Allergy Clinic.

The pulmonary testing and the fat testing are the most popular, said Nancy Noda, manager of Safety and Infection Control.

Becky Cahill, an intern at Midlands from and the Bellevue Leader, and is made possible by volunteers from the Papillion Lions Club. Volunteers help with registration and perform all duties that do not require a medical professional. Noda said the event would not be possible without the volunteers.

Delores Baines has been attending the fair for about five years. "I like it because I can compare the results here with what my doctor says," she said. "I always send him a copy of my tests." She added that the event had more variety this year.

Noda said the reason she believes the event is important is awareness. "There have been success stories where people have found abnormalities," she said. "We don't want to take the place of doctors, but we want to get people to the doctor if they need care."

UNO Aviation Institute Earns Multi-Million Dollar Media Attention

BY LAURIE SANZONE

How does one acquire over a million dollars of media attention in one day?

Recognized as a leading aviation university at both the undergraduate and graduate levels, UNO's Aviation Institute met that challenge recently as participants in a national research project of the country's major airlines. Information was compiled in 19 areas of criteria, ranging from airline load factors and number of accidents and flight problems, to being on time, mishandled baggage, refunds and denied boardings.

Brent Bowen, director and professor of the Aviation Institute, has been involved with airline rating for seven years, five at UNO.

"It gives us a multi-million dollar media exposure," he said. "That's very important for UNO," Bowen said.

But the distinction between his role as judge and the actual airlines themselves is apparently not clear to the public. "It seems that people think that I'm the repository for their complaints about the airlines," he said. He receives complaint phone calls all the time, he added.

"Chicken Soup for the Kids' Souls" and "Chicken Soup for the Grieving Soul."

While his books have inspired millions, his speech centered on motivation.

"We've never had a more opportune time in America," he said.

People need to learn to motivate themselves in order to become successful, he said. They need to change their perceptions in order to change their realities.

Hansen said his books have the effect of "waking people from their spiritual amnesia" so they can take charge of their own lives.

During a time when Hansen was at his lowest in life, he said, a motivational tape that he listened to 287 times helped him change his perceptions and turn his own life around.

lost bags of all the carriers.

Following the Southwest's lead several other airlines also showed improvement.

American Airlines had fewer customer complaints than it had received in 1995 and United Airlines also increased customer satisfaction.

Continental Airlines showed dramatic improvements with the second highest on-time performance, second best lost-baggage rate and a nearly 50 percent reduction in consumer complaints, giving them the "most improved" airlines award.

Northwest Airlines increased their overall standards, mostly with improved baggage handling.

Several airlines - some despite a few encouraging trends - did not improve upon their previous standings.

US Airways was slightly worse in on-time performance and lost baggage from 1995. With only slight improvements, American West slid from fifth to eighth place in the survey. Trans World Airlines (TWA) finished the same as before, with the worst on-time percentage, the second worst baggage handling record, and the highest rate of consumer complaints

Overall, the 1996 quality increased from 1995, unlike most previous years when the AQR diminished. But scores had a downward trend toward the end of the 1996.

Ellen's Gay ... So Are Thousands of Others

The Daily Sundial
California State University-Northridge

It has got to be a tough gig being a homosexual in the age of "political correctness." Who really cares that this is America, "the home of the free?" The country that prides itself on being the nation where "all men are created equal ..."

A recent cover of Time magazine boasted Ellen DeGeneres, star of the hit sitcom "Ellen," announcing that she was indeed gay.

Speculation on this matter has been running rampant over the course of the past few months, it almost became a matter of national importance. Still it prompts many self-respecting citizens to ask the ever-lingering question: "Who really gives a damn?"

Yeah, she's gay. So are hundreds of thousands of other people.

Nonetheless, there are still several simpletons out there who can't find anything better to do with their time than make a big brouhaha -- one such example being the American Family Association, a radical right organization dedicated to upholding "family values."

And what better way to uphold the moral fabric in American society by targeting a source of such moral depravity as the show "Ellen?" Let us not forget the sitcom is produced by the Disney corporation, the symbol for all things good and pure ...

The American Family Association has compiled a list of the three leading "Ellen" advertisers from Jan. 1, 1997 through March 22, 1997. In an attempt to get the show off the air, the group is encouraging its followers to contact these advertisers and "politely" ask them not to sponsor DeGeneres' show and stop pushing the "homosexual agenda."

Agenda?

Are they planning on weaving an evil, mindlock web around America's television viewing public in an attempt to brainwash them into their "way of living?" Probably not. Oprah has been doing this for years; no one is sabotaging her advertising.

It becomes increasingly hard to editorialize against such narrow-mindedness. Hey, people are gay ... Get over it. Is bigotry a family value we want instilled in our children?

Hopefully not.

People aren't gay by choice, and if even if they were ... so what? "All men created equal."

Apparently, this doesn't mean anything unless one is straight, but even then it doesn't mean a helluva lot.

Unfortunately, we're a country built on hypocrisy. It's a shame people care more about Ellen's sexual orientation.

On the menu Fried Chicken, Collard Greens and Foot-a-la-Mouth

COLUMN BY SEAN GUILFOYLE

What's new in the world of sports? Well, aside from the fact that Greg Norman got our president loopy at his residence, a great deal has happened. Some athletes have come a long way this short year, while still others have inserted the infamous "foot in mouth" time and again.

Roberto Alomar and umpire John Hirschbeck were matched together again on Tuesday night at Camden Yards. The two shook hands as Alomar ran out to his position, exchanged a few words (maybe something like, "Don't worry Robbie. I'll save my 'spit' for your grave") and then the game was played. I'm still upset about the whole situation. Alomar weaseled his way out of serving the suspension right away. But, I guess let bygones be bygones. If I were Alomar and Hirschbeck was working behind the plate, I think I'd be swinging with two strikes on me.

Fuzzy Zoeller decided to shake up the world of golf with a few undoubtedly idiotic statements concerning Tiger Woods. Zoeller's remarks came following Woods' victory in the Masters, calling Tiger "that little boy" and urging him not to request fried chicken or collard greens for dinner at Augusta National the next year. Obviously, the statements attributed to Zoeller were in bad taste. I saw footage of his little sound bite. It was uncalled for, yet I hope this doesn't taint the world of golf. Tiger Woods is great for the game, to push it to new heights that were once thought unattainable. Hopefully, this will not push golf a step backward. (Was it just me, or did it look like Fuzzy had one too many post-round cocktails?). I just don't want people to become overtly sensitive, to the point that nothing can be said without offending anyone. I am not defending what Zoeller said, because I think he erred in his remarks. Sometimes it helps if people think before they speak (or, in my case, write--which doesn't do any good anyway).

Being the huge NBA fan I am (not), basketball still does not cease to amaze me. I found nothing funnier than the other night as I watched "SportsCenter." The Philadelphia 76ers were matched against the Washington Bullets (there's an exciting one to watch). The Sixers point guard Allen Iverson, was nearing 40 points (he was three points away) as the game was coming to a close. With the game clearly secured by the Bullets, the Sixers called a time-out to diagram a play for Iverson to score 40. The television cameras panned over to the Bullets' bench. Chuckles, hands covering mouths to keep the hysteria from spilling out was witnessed. Obviously, the Bullets found this as ridiculous as I did. Anyway, the Sixers ran their diagrammed "play" as the Bullet defenders simply moved underneath the basket, allowing Iverson to freely shoot his three-pointer (which he made) and tally 40 points. If this is the future of basketball, let it rest in peace now.

Do pathetic little lives revolve around the world of sports? Here's a nice little bit of trivia: On what day(s) in the year do no sporting events take place (i.e. major sporting events)?

The all-star break in major league baseball (kind of sick, but also nice for those gamblers..er..sports fans).

I'm sure there's bound to be more triumphs and tribulations in the sporting world this year. We still have the NBA finals, the Stanley Cup, the World Series, and the World's Strongest Man competition yet to go this year (my pick for strong man is Magnus verMagnuson). Sports just seem to be an integral part of our society, whether we like it or not.

Does anyone have a better job than the announcers on "SportsCenter?" My point exactly.

Letters to the Editor

'Think About it'

Dear Editor,

In regard to Sally Lansdale's column in the April 22 edition of the Gateway and the continuing letters by Ron Larson: Never before have I seen a college that is so anti-Christian. Could this be a possible reason for the lack of return students?

First, a question for Sally. So would you have a problem with people from Heaven's Gate or the Branch Davidians or the Moonies or any other cult here on campus spreading their message? How about Confucianists or Hindus handing out copies of the Analects or the Bhagavad Gita? Then there's the Shintos, Jainists, and Muslims? If you don't like the Gideons or the "cult" of the month, then don't talk to them, walk away, walk on the other side of the sidewalk, say "no thanks" or whatever. You seem to have a problem with religion on campus. What about those that have problems with the gay and lesbian organizations or other groups that they don't agree with. Should they be kicked off campus as well?

As for Ron, it seems the only way he can feel good about himself is by putting others down. Ron, just because Christians and others believe in something intangible they aren't bad. I bet you once believed in Santa Claus and the tooth fairy. Let us have our beliefs and you can have yours. Just accept it and try not to be so negative. That's the worst way of getting your message across. I wonder how many are already ignoring your letters?

Finally about student retention (and getting them here in the first place as well): UNO prides itself on its diversity. Yet all I see is hate. I'm getting the feeling Christians aren't welcome here - kind of like the "don't ask, don't tell" policy in the military to avoid persecution and ridicule. I'm thinking about leaving after one year. What kind of message about UNO is getting out to the community and prospective students with this hate writing? I will tell anyone I know not to come here. I wonder how many others have done the same or have chosen to go somewhere else where they are not hated and persecuted for their beliefs.

Think about it.

'Thanks for a Lively Discussion'

Dear Editor:

If Mr. Larson has attempted to prove a point, he has. I think he is trying to say that religion is irrational. This I will admit. What I have decided is that life is not always rational and in the same turn, man is not completely rational. I have studied various theories such as rational choice, which assumes man is rational. The only problem is that even a theory that assumes rationality has to admit mankind's irrationality and takes it into account in various functions. My point is, life can not be completely explained by theory or philosophy. Great minds have studied for centuries to discover the meaning of man's existence and other great mysteries of life. If man chooses to set aside God, the questions will persist. Mankind has no purpose or meaning for existence because, if we subscribe to atheism and the theory of evolution that must be used to explain our presence, we are all accidents. Quite a bleak existence. My proving the existence of God is really not necessary, nor will my responding to your points lead to anything fruitful. The problem is that we operate under two opposing premises. I assume that yours is that man is a completely rational being and that faith is irrational because it means believing in what cannot be reasoned. Mine is that faith and reason can be mixed in a healthy balance. I think that any further response on my part is moot, so thank you for a lively discussion.

Sincerely,
Patrick Morrison

The poem taped to the door of the UNO art gallery warns all who enter of the power within its walls.

The first exhibit entitled "Womb: A Room in my Spirit's House," took author Mikaelah Morocco three years to create. Morocco used shields to express her different life experiences. BY DENISE GIAHELLE

Dear Denise,
It's that time of year again when I get the pleasure of picking my classes for the fall semester. Once again I find myself completely frustrated. What is with UNO and the lack of afternoon classes? I am married and have a good paying part-time job in the morning which I cannot afford to give up. When I look through the class catalogue, I see classes at 8-9-10 and 11:00 in the morning, 1:00 and 2:00 in the afternoon, and then once-a-week classes for two 45 minutes and 40 minutes per class.

Aaaaagh! I have never seen a 3:00 p.m. class and 4:00 p.m. and 5:00 p.m. classes are rare.

It seems as though my choices are to quit my job and starve to death or take six years to finish my degree. Wake up UNO. Not everyone has the option of taking morning classes.

Aaaaagh!

Dear Aaaaagh!,

I, too, am married and trying to balance a family and classes. But, I do not have to work, which must be near-to-impossible. Congratulations on your drive and energy.

Although I am free to take classes anytime, I often have to choose between two classes I need to take because they are both scheduled at the same time. So, I took your very good question to the foreign language department where I spend a lot of my time.

Dr. Anthony Jung, a German professor, said a committee decides what courses are offered and what time. That committee's decision is then passed on to the department chair who has the final say. The committee looks at what classes most of the students can attend by studying what was offered and how many students took advantage of the time and the class.

"It's not capricious," Jung said. He wanted to reassure you that they look at the needs of the majority of students, not just the needs of the faculty.

Kay Bret, staff secretary in the foreign language department, said they try classes at different times if enough students show an interest. They had to cancel an evening class recently and the instructor tutored students during that time. "The class was canceled due to low enrollment," Bret said.

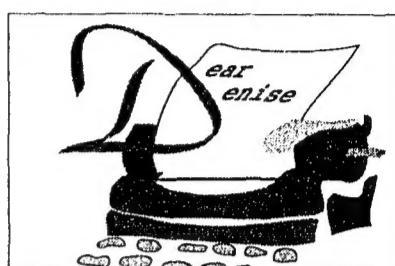

Bret also said they have to justify the extra cost of an added class with the dean.

Of course, Aaaaagh!, this is just one department, but I'm sure it works the same way all over the university. The university's resources are limited and they have to look for where they will get the biggest bang for their buck. While I sympathize with your problem, I can also see the business-side the university must address.

An option that some students take is to go to Lincoln for a few classes. Now that the speed limit is higher, Lincoln is less than an hour away. You did not say why you do not like the longer one-night-a-week classes. I enjoy those because I have a whole week to do the homework and reading and it seems like a more in-depth look at the subject because it is not over in 50 minutes. Class discussions can really get interesting when there are several hours and less rush to finish.

So, Aaaaagh!, I hope knowing why classes are when they are makes you feel a little better. Good luck.

Dear Denise is not a professional. She is just a disinterested third party. Have a question? Send your letters to Dear Denise. I do not need your real name and address, just your question. Letters can be sent to editor@gateway.unomaha.edu mailed to the Gateway (MBSC 115, Omaha, NE 68182) or dropped off in Room 115 in the Student Center. Call 554-2470 if you have questions.

Many Ways to Celebrate Earth Day...Twice

BY RENEE RYAN

Even though national celebrations for Earth Day took place Tuesday, Omahans got a head start on the celebrating in Elmwood Park Sunday. Even rain could not dampen the spirits of those attending Omaha's Earth Day celebration at Elmwood Park.

Musicians including Duggan and Doyle, Six Speed Universe, and Grasshopper Takeover performed with tarp-covered equipment.

Some of the 35 booths lingered in their trucks because of the rain. Children read poetry and artwork depicting various Earth Day themes from Omaha Public Schools' students covered a near-by vacant building.

Cathy Stevens, one of the event's coordinators, estimated the crowd at 4:30 p.m. to be 1,500.

For those who missed the events in Elmwood Park, Borders bookstore celebrated with happenings that border the cosmos. In honor of the 'official' Earth Day (April 22), story time featured the planet Earth. Tarot card readings took place throughout the afternoon and angel readings and palm readings ruled the evening.

The tarot card reader, who calls herself Diane, has been reading tarot cards since 1969. She believes strongly in the power of her cards, and carries them with her at all times. She tries to focus on the positive parts of a reading, she said, and tries not to scare people.

Diane believes the cards are like calling the American Automobile Association — a reading is like a road map of the best course, but ultimately it's up to you what course you choose.

She also emphasizes the link from the present to the future in tarot readings and making decisions.

Victoria, the angel reader, says this technique differs from tarot readings because she tells people about their guardian angels. Claiming to be psychic, she has been doing readings for 15 years. She maintains that she sees angels and hears them speaking to people.

Day for Jesus

If You're A Lastborn . . .

What is a laterborn child to do? Well, you don't want to copy any of your older siblings, so you choose to carve your way through your family with rebellion and risk-taking. But all these attention-seeking tactics aren't all bad. You are charming and tenacious, too. Sulloway says you love to take your friends and discover new things with them; affection is your middle name.

"I have to be the center of attention at all times," Primilia Chang, a CSU junior, says. "I guess that's why my parents keep telling me I developed this distinct sense of humor."

Maybe a career choice as a disc jockey, teacher or salesperson is for you. It's a wonder you get anything done with your carefree attitude, never wanting to take responsibility. But as long as you are doing something entertaining, you'll be happy.

If You're A Lonely Only . . .

Well, you're not necessarily lonely. After all, you have the best of both worlds: being the oldest and the youngest at the same time. Only children tend to identify very closely with their parents. And because of this, Sulloway suggests only children are more characteristic of firstborns versus lastborn rebellion.

Friends may classify you as conscientious and rather difficult to get to know in the beginning, but you are worth the extra effort, right? On the other hand, your ex-boyfriend or girlfriend may recommend you stop judging others with the high standards you place on yourself.

"I used to be friends with this girl in high school and she seemed to be so naive, but was knowledgeable enough to be a backstabber," Warren Dixon, theater major, says. "Needless to say, I discontinued my friendship with her. I don't know if she behaved this way because she is an only child... I just assumed that was the problem," Dixon adds.

Whether birth order merits more research, that's debatable. The topic is so extensive: what about twins and other multiple womb mates? And most importantly, what about the Brady Bunch? Maybe Sulloway would say Cindy should have grown up to be a wild revolutionary. What about Jan? The poor thing never had a chance.

Apple Loyalists Blast Ellison For Proposing Oracle Takeover Of Apple

BY JODI MARDESICH

Knight-Ridder/Tribune News Service

CUPERTINO, Calif.—Oracle Chairman Larry Ellison turned to the Internet last month to drum up support for his scheme to save Apple Computer Inc. Now it looks as though Ellison is losing the war for cyberspace mindshare as a growing number of Mac fanatics see Ellison as more threat than savior.

Incensed that Ellison seems to want to mine Apple for its brand name—not for its easy-to-use Macintosh technology—a 20-year-old college student has set up a "Fight Back for the Mac!" Web site to make sure Ellison gets the thumbs-down message loud and clear.

Since Friday, the site has collected more than 1,400 signatures on a petition to stop Ellison. So angry are some respondents that they are threatening to boycott products made by Oracle Corp. should he launch a takeover. Others are urging Macintosh users to buy and accumulate Apple stock as a potential defense.

This latest twist in the Apple saga comes as details emerged last week that Ellison essentially wants to use Apple as a tool to popularize the "network computer," a simple inexpensive alternative to a PC whose sales would benefit Oracle.

When Ellison first disclosed in late March that he was assembling an investor group and considering bidding for Apple, he piqued the interest of many who have been hoping that Apple could pull out of its money-losing slump. But the change in attitude of fervent Mac loyalists—a vocal, cult-like lot—could take some steam out of Ellison's endeavors.

Tim McCleary, a computer science student at Millersville University in Pennsylvania, started his own brand of online activism with the anti-Ellison site he opened Wednesday.

"My intentions were to make the Macintosh community aware of what Larry Ellison is trying to do and to gather support against him," McCleary said.

He and others have registered the domain name Saveapple.com, which will become the home of the petition, mail and other activities to try to aid ailing Apple. The Saveapple.com site will be activated in the next few days, McCleary said.

"I was pretty upset, because (Ellison) just basically acted as though he could take over Apple, and the Mac community would have no say," McCleary said in an interview.

True to form, the e-mail on McCleary's site is passionate. "I was not sure...how I felt about your plan for a takeover. As of now I know how I feel. Threatened," wrote Jarrett Kertesz, chief executive officer of Tsunami Design, in San Francisco. "In the future, if you do kill off Apple as we know it, I will boycott any product you are even remotely involved in."

On the site, Ellison is called, variously, "a fool," "a villain" and a man who would "destroy Apple as a company."

As of Tuesday, over 1,800 have electronically signed their name to a petition that reads like a version of the Constitution. "We, the Macintosh community..." it begins, and ends with a plea to Ellison not to "risk the life of this company and the passion of millions. Please."

Adding to the loyalists' ire was that Ellison no longer seemed interested in hearing their concerns. A spokesman for Ellison said his mail box has been closed because the initial feedback had been received.

Ellison, who has not disclosed who his financial backers might be nor whether he will ultimately launch a bid, did take note of McCleary's protest.

While he had been quoted in a Japanese newspaper last week as saying he would turn Apple into a network computer maker, Ellison sent an e-mail clarification to the college student Saturday. "I intend to use the Mac OS to build Mac NCs. Big Macs will continue," Ellison wrote.

Ellison didn't say he had been misquoted in the Japanese newspaper. Instead, he expanded his vision: "I am a Mac user. Have been since 1984. The only way to save the Mac is to increase unit volume. Big Macs—like the one you and I have grown to love—will continue. Networks of low-cost Mac NCs will be sold to schools and add to the overall Mac volume," he wrote.

"At $500 for a Mac NC more people will be able to afford a Mac. Big Macs plus little Mac NCs make for good business at Apple...and better schools."

Despite Ellison's past success steering Oracle out of dire financial straits and turning it

UNO Students Play 'Hockey on a Soccer Field'

BY BRI KUPFER

A small group of UNO students gather at Al Caniglia Field on Monday and Wednesday evenings to practice. But the game they play is a little out of place on the football field. Their game, lacrosse, is a club sport at UNO and, although not exactly well-known, it has become popular at some colleges around the country.

The sport is popular enough in the Midwest for the UNO club team to find opponents in the surrounding area. Grinnell College, located in Grinnell, Iowa, is scheduled to play UNO at Caniglia Field on Saturday.

Lacrosse originated as a Native American game. The name comes from the French explorers who called the game "la crosse", or "the croisier" because the stick used in the game resembled the cross-shaped staffs carried by Catholic bishops.

The game is played on a field slightly bigger than a football field with two teams of 10 players each. Players use a long-handled stick with a webbed pouch on the end to maneuver the ball down the field into the opposing team's goal.

There are three forwards, three defenders and three midfielders on each team. The forwards must remain on the offensive side of the field at all times and four players must remain on defense.

That leaves the midfielders, referred to as "middies," to compete across the entire field for the ball. "They're the guys, like Todd, that do all the running," said team member Jeff Dunn, pointing to one of his teammates running across the field.

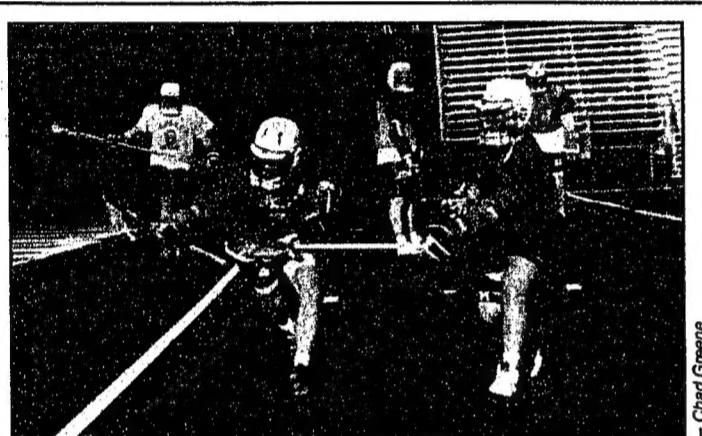

The stick used in Lacrosse is both an offensive and defensive weapon. "The rules say you can only pull it back about 90 degrees when you hit someone," Dunn said, swinging his stick to emphasize the point. "But as you can see, you can get a lot of velocity from that." He said the arms are the best target for a blow, since you can not advance the ball if you can not hold the stick.

"It's a lot like hockey on a soccer field," Dunn said.

Charles Cunningham, the team's co-captain, said the team is always looking for more players. He said interested persons should contact the campus recreation office.

UNO has had a lacrosse team for the past four or five years. There are about 15 people officially on the roster, according to Cunningham, but up to 30 people show up to play at different times. He said it is not too difficult to field a

No. 4 Lady Mavs Split With Morningside

BY JONATHAN PELPHREY

The UNO softball team settled for a split in a doubleheader with North Central Conference rival Morningside College Wednesday.

The Lady Mavs, currently ranked No. 4 in the country, fell to the Morningside squad 4-2 in the first game at Claussen-Westgate Field in Omaha.

New Athletic Director Named

BY JONATHAN PELPHREY

UNO Chancellor Del Weber announced Wednesday that Assistant Athletic Director Bob Danenhauer has been appointed the new athletic director, effective July 1. He will replace current Athletic Director Don Leahy.

Danenhauer, who has been the assistant athletic director since September, 1995, is a 1982 graduate of UNO. He was an all-North Central Conference defensive lineman for the Mavs in 1980 and played in the National Football League in Seattle and Buffalo.

"Bob has done an outstanding job and is an integral part of the current athletic expansion program," Weber said. "I think he is the person to lead our athletic program into this new era."

Leahy, who announced his retirement in December, has been athletic director at UNO twice. He served from 1974-1985 and returned in August, 1995.

"He was made for the job," Leahy said in reference to Danenhauer.

Danenhauer said he has learned a lot from Leahy and Associate Athletic Director Connie Claussen in the past two years. "I feel very fortunate to be able to return to my alma mater and to work and learn from people the caliber of Don Leahy and Connie Claussen," he said. "I'm grateful for the opportunity to lead the program."

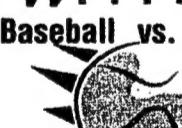

Claussen, the senior woman administrator in the athletic department, praised the selection of Danenhauer. "He's a perfect fit and I couldn't be happier working for him," she said.

team on game day but, like many club sports at UNO, it is sometimes hard to get everyone to practice.

Cunningham said the team practices from 6:30 p.m. to 8 p.m. at "the new-look 'Al,'" though they have been under pressure lately from intramural sports to find another practice field.

The Lady Mavs will send a contingent to the Drake Relays today and Saturday in Des Moines, then turn around and compete in the Nebraska Wesleyan Open on Sunday.

The Drake Relays only invites selected athletes to compete. The individual UNO athletes who will be included are Carri Butler, Elise Henry, Tara Biltolf, Jamie Erkes, Sandy Derby and Theresa Williams. The Lady Mavs will also field a 4x100 meter relay team, a 4x400 meter relay team, and a sprint medley relay team.

After this week, only one meet remains before the North Central Conference Championships May 9-10.

Mavs Sign Basketball Player

UNO Head Basketball Coach Kevin Lehman announced the signing of a fifth new recruit Tuesday. Patrick Voss, a 5-10 guard from Moline, Ill., has signed a national letter of intent to attend UNO next fall and play for the Mavs.

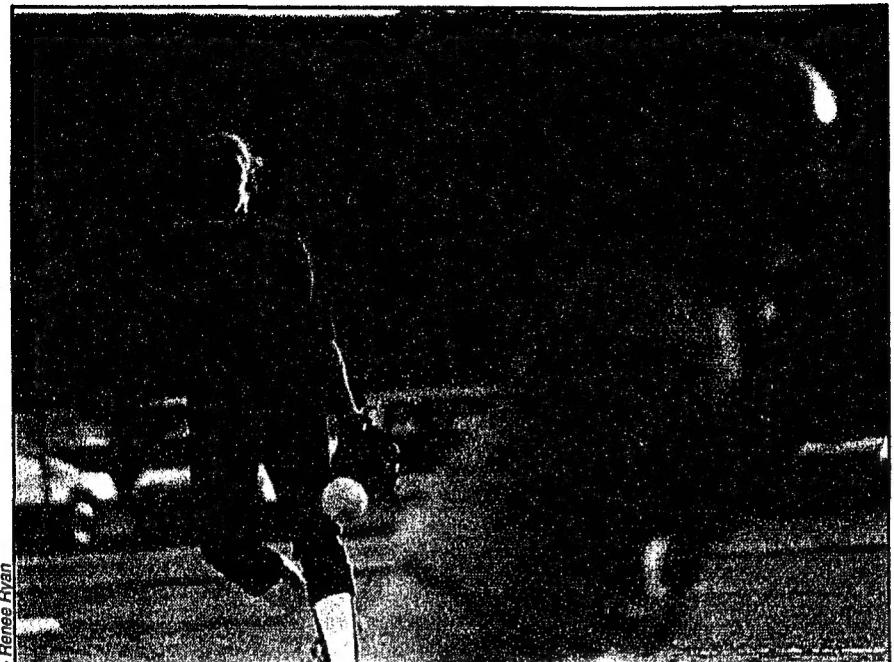

Voss has earned a number of honors this year at Alleman High School, including first-team all-state honors. He led his team to a third place finish in the Illinois State Tournament and was named to the all-tournament team.

He averaged 17 points, five assists, and three steals this year, while leading his conference in three-point shooting. In addition, Voss was named the 1997 Quad Cities Area Player of the Year.

Voss will join former Alleman High School teammate Brian Trapkus, who was redshirted as a freshman this year.

Despite connecting for 12 hits in the game, the Lady Mavs came up short in the runs department. In both the sixth and seventh innings the Lady Mavs had the bases loaded with no outs but were unable to score the go-ahead runs.

Over the course of the game, UNO batters left 11 runners on base.

Lady Mav pitching ace Tara Buzzell threw a complete game, giving up only seven hits. But in the top of the sixth, Morningside's Mindy Prince hit a three-run home run to put her team ahead 4-1.

The Lady Mavs managed only one more run over the next two innings.

The tide turned in game two. The Lady Mavs scored two runs to start off the game, one in each of the first two innings. Morningside managed a run in the top of the fourth inning, but the Lady Mavs answered with another of their own.

That would be all they needed, as they went on to win it 3-2.

UNO's freshman pitcher Kelly Secord went the entire game, allowing only two runs on seven hits. She improves to 14-2 on the season.

Secord helped herself offensively as well, blasting a solo home run while going 2-for-3 on the day.

A Male Miss? Male Candidate Still in Race for Campus Queen

BY CHRISTALYN LAGARDE

The Southern University Digest
College Press Service

BATON ROUGE, La.—Southern University senior Rufus Young admits he isn't one for tradition.

As a male candidate for the Miss Southern pageant, Young already is bucking the conventional image of a beauty contestant by entering the school-sponsored contest.

But he's also going a step further—by arguing that he shouldn't have to strut his stuff in an evening dress or in a swimsuit to be eligible to win the title of Miss Southern.

Students cast votes for Miss Southern, just as they elect the student body president and class officers. Young said he objects to the pageant because it doesn't have any bearing on who wins the title.

"There is no rule that mandates that I have to participate in the pageant," said Young, a senior English major and Dallas native. "If I am disqualified it would be under an unwritten law, which would be illegal. The pageant has nothing to do with elections."

Traditionally, students compete for the Miss Southern title in a pageant that consists of a swimsuit, an evening wear and a talent competition and in an interview segment. The winner is crowned during homecoming week and serves as a representative of the student body at various functions throughout the year.

Young said he was threatened with disqualification if he did not participate in the pageant by Terral Jackson, the Student Government Association advisor.

But Gerald Peoples, vice chancellor for student affairs, says that the administration never intended to disqualify Young in the race for Miss Southern.

"Terral Jackson does not speak for the administration. There is nothing written that says you have to be a female or that you have to participate in the pageant," said Peoples.

When students first heard about a male running for Miss Southern, they were uneasy because it was "Rufus vs. tradition," said Young.

But now that students have heard his reasons for entering the pageant, his bid for the title has more support, Young added. He says now students view his entry as "Rufus against the administration," and students are more willing to support his battle against the "big bad administration than tradition."

So, just why would a guy like Young be interested in entering a beauty contest? Young says his motive is to give Miss Southern more power and prestige on campus.

"Miss Southern's premiere office should effect student policy," he said. "Yet she has no seat on any executive boards or committees of the Student Government Association."

Young says he entered the Miss Southern pageant to attract attention to his proposed constitutional amendment to combine the office of the president of the Association of Women Students with Miss Southern. He also is proposing that a Mr. Southern be created, and that the winner's duties be combined with that of the Men's Federation president.

"Combining the powers of these two offices would continue the tradition of representation of Miss Southern and help it evolve into a higher nature," Young said.

By becoming a candidate for Miss Southern, Young says he also wants students to focus on the fact that the election codes and S.G.A. constitution regulations are not specific enough to keep a male from running for Miss Southern.

In fact, if Young is disqualified from being a contestant because he's male, he may have cause to file a suit on the basis of gender discrimination, said attorney Dan Schaneville, of Schaneville & Baringer Attorneys at Law. If successful, Young likely would receive damages only, which would force the university to invent a Mr. Southern or revise its constitution, he predicted.

Peoples says he has no problem with Young's candidacy. "If the student body wishes to have a male represent them as Miss Southern, then so be it," he said. "We will crown him at halftime like we did all the past Miss Southerns, and we will call him Miss Southern."

-- from Apple, page 8 --

into the leading database company, McCleary said he simply does not trust him.

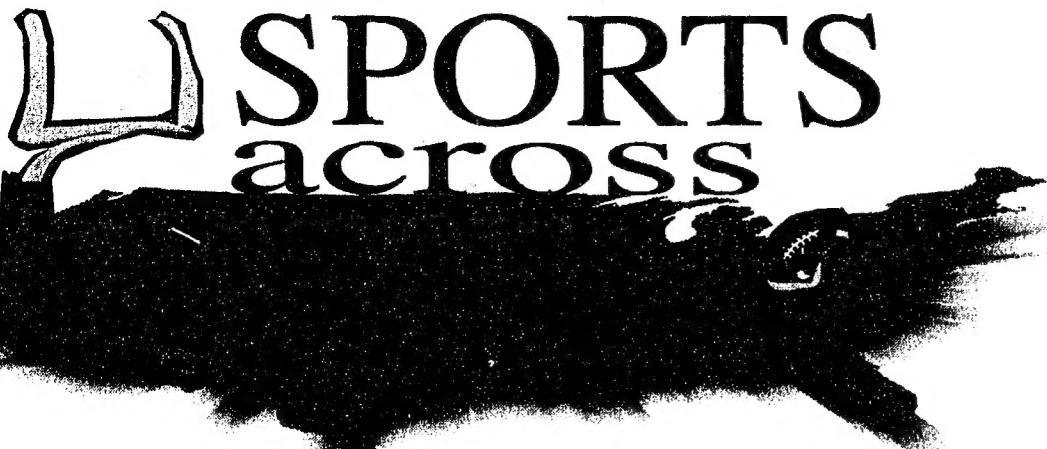

"He's been very vague and that's why I am not willing to give him my support," McCleary said. "His attention seems focused on network computers, not on saving Apple."

Apple has remained mum on the subject, with representatives declining to comment. But the company is not ignoring Ellison. A source close to Apple said the company has retained investment banker Goldman Sachs & Co. and New York-based Abernathy MacGregor Group, a public relations outfit that represents companies in crisis.

Some Mac users want Ellison and others, including the press, to back off and give Apple Chairman Gilbert Amelio a chance to execute his strategy. "They have a plan in place," McCleary said. "This would just be one more distraction."

Youngest Coach Leads NCAA Football Team

COLLEGEVILLE, Pa. (CPS)—Paul Guenther, 25, plans to spend a lot of time this fall on the sidelines during Ursinus College's football games.

But Guenther doesn't play for the Ursinus Bears. He's the head coach.

At 25 years and five months, Paul Guenther is the youngest person to lead a football team in the NCAA.

"Paul brings a youthful exuberance for the game that is very refreshing to see," athletic director Bill Akin said.

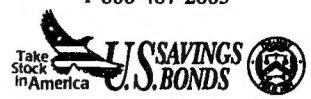

Guenther, an Ursinus graduate, replaces Steve Gilbert who left in February to become head coach at Jacksonville University.

"We are pleased that Paul has agreed to become our head coach," Akin said. "He was instrumental in designing our nationally ranked defense of last season, and we feel it is important to maintain that continuity."
